

Jonathan Martin—Instruction

As an instructor my interest has mostly been focused on being in front of the classroom. As an undergrad I started to take more notice of how the campus operated, but never considered that something in my purview. After becoming an instructor, however, that changed drastically. Now I realize that there are a lot of important interactions between each student and the campus in many capacities outside of just an education. Resources, facilities, and other campus activities and groups are life-shaping for many students. This new perspective has continued to push me towards outreach to students and the general community, and the desire to want to be involved in making decisions to help students from the beginning to the end of their first two years of education. This is the primary reason for running in the Academic Senate Part time senator election, and I hope to be able to serve my campus community in this capacity.
